An international scientific conference

Community Cohesion and Well-Being, and Innovative Development

will be held on December 4, 2018, in Warsaw

The conference is organized by Statistics Poland and Cardinal Stefan Wyszyński University in Warsaw (CSWU)

The conference is devoted to the broadly conceived issue of well-being of local communities and their members (inhabitants), with the intention of deepening the knowledge about the relationships in which it remains with the level and nature of local development. While the exploration of these dependencies was the subject of a similar conference, organized two years ago jointly by Statistics Poland and CSWU, Quality of life and spatial cohesion. Interactions of development and welfare in the local context, this event can be considered as its extension, in two interrelated dimensions – cohesion and innovation – treated at the same time as factors of well-being, both at the individual and community level.
